Delta to link the Southeast with Chicago

Delta Air Lines has been authorized by the Civil Aeronautics Board to operate two new routes from Chicago to the Southeast—one terminating at Charleston and the other in Miami. This award adds approximately 1,078 miles to existing Delta routes—provides service to ten new cities with a total population in excess of four million persons.

The Air Trade Routes of the South, developed by Delta over the past 16 years, are thus rounded out into even more complete Southern coverage—and Chicago becomes the first of a series of key city terminals outside the South to be reached through Delta's expansion program.

The New South, the industrial and air-conscious South, needs additional service to the nation's business centers. Detroit, Cleveland, Kansas City, Washington and New York are other natural destinations for Delta-developed traffic.

Since flying its first passenger in 1929, Delta has built a Southern air communication system with an unparalleled record of operation. Both North and South will benefit from each new national center Delta serves.
